MOKENA CIVIC CLUB HEARS GAS TAX DISCUSSED

The Mokena Civic Association held its regular monthly meeting in the church parlors of Immanuel Lutheran church, Monday night. Mr. Barnick of Elgin, Ill., representing the State Highway department, gave an interesting talk and answered a number of questions regarding to what use Mokena's share of the Motor Fuel tax money could be put for improving other main artery streets of the village. He explained that the 3 cent tax is split three ways. One cent goes to the villages, one cent to the county and one cent to the state and that Mokena's share can be used on Front, first, second and Division Streets. Said streets being classified as arterial streets and having the minimum width of 50 feet from property line to line. Further, that paving streets with motor fuel tax must be done in accordance with specifications required by the state highway department. A mile of 18 foot black top paving with a six inch gravel base and necessary drainage and grading would cost approximately $6000.00. This money can also be used for improving the drainage as well as for the maintenance of said arterial streets. There is at present $1208.79 in this fund. It would therefore take a number of years to accumulate a large enough amount to pave our arterial streets.

The Committee on Boy Scouts reported that 12 boys of 12 years of age had been selected as a nucleus for the Boy Scout organization and the committee wishes to emphasize the fact that these boys were picked without prejudice of any kind and that they were selected only for their ages. The first meeting will be held on April 25 and the boys will be notified as to the meeting place.

The secretary reported that a perpetual memorial of $5.00 was given to the local chapter of the American Red Cross in loving memory of our active and loyal member, Erwin McGovney now deceased. It was moved and seconded to inscribe on the minutes, the letter of condolence written to the bereaved family by the secretary of the association.

The Civic Association is also attempting to initiate a town meeting. If successful it will be made a permanent institution. The success of this venture depends entirely upon the local people and the interest they will take in matters that are extremely important to them on National, state and community welfare. The Association is also making plans to sponsor another bigger and better Harvest festival in the early part of this coming fall.

Wild Life Corner

MELVIN WHITAKER

I wish to make a few points clear that seem to be misunderstood by some farmers as well as some members of Sportsmen's clubs. Sportsmen try to get farmer membership as well as their cooperation in the restocking program. The farmer nothing could be accomplished. The game may be raised in or near a city but it must be released on farm land. It has been learned that when a farmer thoroughly understands the restocking program the state has under way he is anxious to do his part. The belief that if a farmer belongs to his local sportsmen's club he is obligated to let all members roam over his land at will is entirely wrong. Likewise the belief that because you have a card of membership you are free to hunt where you please, is wrong. A member of any sportsman's club has no more right to trespass than any other individual. Most good sportsmen realize this but there are those who think because they spend fifty cents for membership they can do as they please. As has been pointed out before, the purpose of these groups is to help the state in its conservation and restocking program which is of course of benefit to the sportsmen as well as the farmers. There is definitely nothing in any of these groups that gives the members any rights to trespass except of course these private clubs who lease their lands and then they are not trespassing.

All good sportsmen do their share to replace game lost by hunting and natural causes and welcome farmers and others to join in this conservation work.

May 1st Mokena Clean Up Day

The Mokena village board met in adjourned meeting Wednesday night to canvass the returns of Tuesday's election which were duly approved. At this meeting bids for hauling and disposing village rubbish were received and opened. There were only two bids, one from Peter Homering for $45, the other from Walter Muehler for $35.50. The job was awarded to Mr. Muehler.

The board then set May first as Clean Up Day for Mokena and all

Farm Security Administration Is Aid To Farmers

The Farm Security Administration part of the U.S. Department of Agriculture helps farmers who need financial assistance. It makes small loans to farm families who cannot get credit from any other source, to enable them to buy the tools, livestock, seed and other equipment necessary to carry on farming operations. In some cases, it also advances them money to buy food and clothing until they can make their first crop. The Farm Security Administration's county supervisor helps each family to work out a careful plan of farm operations, so it will get the best possible use out of the money it borrows.

At the meeting of the borrowers of the FSA at the court house, Friday, April 14, three topics were discussed. The Long Row Farm Garden was presented by L. W. Braham, Farm Adviser for Will County. A canning summary was given by Mrs. Huffman, Home Advisor for Will County. The McLean System of Swine Sanitation was presented by Ward Edwards, Secretary-Treasurer of the Production Credit Association. The speakers were introduced by Milton C. Gauthier, Rural Rehabilitation Supervisor of the Farm Security Administration.

In encouraging the live at home aim of the FSA considerable time was spent on ways and means of producing more of the food for the family in the garden. Some of the main points that were brought out at the meeting were that it is much better to have the garden of a size and in a place where it can be cultivated with horses and a single row cultivator which would cut the cost amount of hoeing that would need to be done.

In canning the use of the pressure cooker was stressed, especially in the canning of non-acid vegetables, such as sweet corn and peas. The danger of botulism when canning without a pressure cooker is very great in these two vegetables. Cases are on record of where the merely tasting the spoiled food has caused death within a few hours.

When the Farm Security Administration loans money to a family, they will loan enough additional for the purchase of a pressure cooker and fruit jars so that there can be an adequate canning program for the family which is 80 quarts per person. For a family of five this would be 400 quarts. According to Milton C. Gauthier, R. R. Supervisor, the average for the FSA borrowers last year was 82 quarts per person.

The importance of a clean farrowing house and a clean pasture for the first four months for pigs was also brought out in a forceful manner. The FSA loans money to its borrowers in order that they can have separate farrowing houses for each sow, since thrifty pigs which will reach market age in six or seven months will help to rehabilitate the borrower in a much shorter time.

The Mokena Civic Association has donated $5 to the Mokena Chapter of the Red Cross for a memorial to the memory of Erwin McGovney former Mokena village treasurer and business man.

A few months ago, Rev. W. J. Gelfert of the Immanuel Lutheran church of Mokena, had made a motion that a memorial be created for deceased members and Mr. McGovney seconded the motion and he is the first member of the Association to pass away and the first memorial has been created in his memory.

Following are letters written by the secretary of the Association, John Fox, to the McGovney family and to Mrs. McGuire, head of the Mokena Chapter of the Red Cross, regarding the memorial.

Chas. Pease, New Lenox Crowned Prize Smelt Eater

At the annual smelt fry of the New Lenox Chapter of the Illinois Federation of Sportsmen's Clubs on Thursday evening, April 13, Charlie Pease was crowned champion after he had downed 46 of these wrigglers. One hundred pounds of this small, delicious silvery fish were consumed by the sportsmen, and Carley had to eat fast and furiously before he was declared the winner. The smelt eating contest was held in conjunction with the nationwide program conducted each year in connection with the smelt run in Escanaba, Michigan.

As a part of the entertainment, movies were shown of deep sea fishing, stalking of big game, etc. The feature of the evening was the mystic power displayed by Stanley Ekedahl in his repertoire of tricks on magic. Mr. Ekedahl is a magician of more than ordinary note, and his perfection in this science, which was most interestingly portrayed, was much enjoyed by those present.

The twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. George Elsner of Frankfort was celebrated last Saturday evening in the parlors of St. Peter's Evangelical church in Frankfort. A large group of relatives and friends were the guests.

A very interesting program was given in which Warren and Jeanette Heusner gave a piano and violin duet; Mrs. Chase of Joliet sang, "I Love You Truly" and "Silver Threads Among the Gold". Mrs. Chase also led the group singing with Edith Wischover at the piano.

Miss E. Bruggeman gave several readings, one being about the romance of Min and George. Mr. Fred Scheel of Chicago was toastmaster.

Village of Palos Sets Voting Record

The village of Palos Park had quite a spirited contested village election Tuesday resulting in the election of a new mayor, Geo. V. Hermanson who defeated J. W. Mahaffy. Mr. Mahaffy served as mayor for the past ten years. The new mayor has been connected with the village board for over 22 years.

The village of Palos Park, having the Commission form of government they elected commissioners in place of village trustees. The only member of the old board of commissioners to retain his office was Chas. W. Heidei.

The new commissioners are: Dr. A. M. Bressler, Robt. Firalyo, Logan Furry. Lester Mahaffay was reelected to office of police magistrate. One exceptional feature of the election was the large number of votes cast. The total number of registered voters in Palos being 343, out of which 313 votes were cast. Only 28 voters failed to vote. CHAPTER XV—Continued

Louise and Breck finished roast beef from the can, had chocolate bars for dessert, then cups of coffee. Beyond their shelter the rain fell with soft rustling through the pines, then drifted on. Clouds parted and stars came out. Breck looked at his watch. Two o'clock. Dawn would break in another hour. He must leave her then and go down to the Potholes.

"When did Cook call your camp?" he asked, leading their talk to the nesters.

"About the middle of the afternoon. He and Slim were to start, but they would be a day on the trail."

"I hope Kern Peak can head them off, now that it's over," Breck continued. "Didn't Cook think I had help from the Potholes?"

"He didn't say," Louise stirred up the fire and hunched herself closer to it.

Breck pushed their plates from the bedroll and sat next to her. "Louise," he asked, "can you tell me what I'm thinking about now?"

Her lips began a smile, parted, closed. Then she answered with a slow shake of her head.

"Well, I'm thinking of the Potholes, and of what kept the nesters from coming into this fire. It will be daybreak in another hour and I must go down there. You're going back to Temple Meadow, I suppose? Will you try to get Cook on the line and let him know about this fire? Tell him I'll call later."

She avoided his request. "Why are you going to the Potholes?"

"I'm afraid that's asking my business, isn't it?"

"Yes. I meant it that way. But I'm sorry; my mistake. I somehow thought we had reached a point where we could talk openly."

Breck dropped his hand upon both of hers, resting in her lap. "I was short, Louise. Forgive me. I'm going to the Potholes to prove a suspicion."

Still with her eyes upon the coals, she asked, "You think the nesters started this fire?"

"I'm not certain. I do know someone drove them from helping on it."

"The Tillsons?"

Breck nodded.

Louise turned to him. "I can tell you about this fire, exactly. Lightning started it."

"Of course. Lightning always starts them!"

"It's true this time."

"You seem to know. How?"

Louise hesitated. She released her hands. "We're talking openly? No mistakes. No misunderstanding, is that right?"

"Yes."

"Well, Art Tillson came to our camp, day before yesterday. That was before the fire started. He stayed all night—the night it started, and I talked with him. Now do you see?"

"Too much!" Breck bit off the words, striving to conceal a flare of temper. He was jealous, foolish, yet helpless to stem the burst of feeling the name had aroused.

"What if they didn't start the fire?" he demanded. "The Tillsons are holding a threat over the nesters. It's time for a cleaning and the trail starts down there!"

Louise did not speak. He sensed a swift tension of her body, though the only visible sign was of her fingers clasped tight about one knee. Suddenly she lifted her face to him. "Gordon Breck, I know the rules. A girl should never plead with a man. I'm not pleading, I merely ask. Promise me you will not go there now."

She was so close at his side. He felt her quick breath and knew she spoke in desperation. And yet—

"You ask me to ignore a ranger's duty?"

A note of defiance came into her voice as she replied. "What is a ranger's duty if it isn't to use his head! You have nothing on the nesters—you can get nothing. That isn't the place to begin. You'll think I'm begging for them. I guess I am. I know some of the families, the women, and I don't want to see them driven out. Give me a chance with them, won't you?"

"A chance for what?"

"To talk with Weller sometime."

"I've talked with him already. It's useless. I'm through with words!"

"Oh, you men are stupid!" she flared. "Stupid! All you think of is strapping on a gun and going out to shoot. Is there never another way to settle?"

"Not this," Breck asserted. "At least not for me. I have more than a ranger's duty here."

"How have you?"

"Did you know the man who had this job before me?"

"Jimmy Cotter? Yes, I knew him well. He was killed and you've come to retaliate."

Breck frowned, asking, "Who said so?"

"No one said it. But you're wearing his Luger. I knew that meant some connection."

Surprised, Breck said nothing.

"You see," Louise continued, "I understand many things in these mountains—too many. I understand the nesters' position, and Art Tillson's, and yours."

In sudden impulse, her hand clasped his, warm, throbbing. "Gordon! Don't you see? Cotter lost his life and gained nothing; threw it away on a chance. It's terrible, all of it. Something will happen, I know. But you, you must not be the one to pay heedlessly. Won't you consider it like that for your own sake?"

Swept by the girl's fervor Breck drew her madly into the circle of his arms. "And for yours?" he asked, holding her close. "Louise!"

She yielded only for an instant as he kissed her. Then she held her face away while her eyes searched deep into his. "I cannot answer saw the fineness of her attempt and could yield to it until his plan opened.

Upon entering the room Cook drew a packet of letters from his saddle bag. Breck carried them to his bunk and stretched himself full length. Muscles were beginning to stiffen.

Breck unwrapped his letters, seeing at once the postmarks were from one to three weeks old. His correspondence was not large, as his plan of coming to the mountains was known only to a few persons. Here was business mostly; though one envelope among the lot had never seen an office desk. It had cream paper inside, and even through the accumulated smell of leather and mules, gave off a certain fragrance.

Breck had reason to recall that

"Mud's up," said Slim, pouring a cup of coffee.

Breck left his bunk and joined the two men around a big black pot on the table.

"So the nesters threw you down, did they?" Sierra began at once. "And Art Tillson was riding their country before the fire. Ain't hard to read that sign. A pack of bug-juice was about due to go out of these hills. Tillson wanted to keep us too busy to notice it."

"This was a lightning fire," Breck argued. "No one set it to help the Tillsons."

Sierra shrugged. "Hand of God on their side then!"

"I think Slim has the straight of it," Cook put in. "This particular fire may have just happened, but the Tillson crowd are due to make a shipment and might have used it."

With the dawn they rode north together.

you, not now. But I want your trust. Promise me that?"

He nodded, bending his head until it touched the softness of her hair.

With the dawn they rode north together, and parted on the ridge where Breck's trail struck west toward Rock House.

CHAPTER XVI

There were others already at his cabin, when, about mid-morning, he came into the meadow bowl. He saw smoke rising from the chimney, and then with glasses, made out Sierra Slim in the doorway. Presently Cook appeared. They too stood with glasses at their eyes. Breck lifted one arm to them and rode on at a lope.

"Howdy, pardner," Slim greeted him.

Cook's first question was, "Like fire fighting, son?"

Breck swung off and shook hands, glad to see them. Sierra's face was as long and melancholy as ever. After the first welcome he said nothing. Cook was genial and helped throw off the pack, though he did not mention more of the job until they had turned out the animals. Then, walking from the corral, he said, "Hot one for a time, wasn't it?"

"Kept me busy," Breck agreed. "We were on our way, but called Kern Peak and found you had it under control. There's some mail for you in my bag. That's why we swung around here. Pack train came up from Lone Tree yesterday and goes down tomorrow, if you have anything to send out."

Breck nodded. He hadn't written a letter in six weeks.

"Nesters help you?"

"No."

They had reached the cabin door. Cook halted, one hand on the knob. "What the devil! Did they refuse?"

"Their excuse was that they had no tools."

"I know it," said Cook scowling. "And that's a damn shame! There's nothing at the Potholes. We're short. But they never held out on that account. How do you figure?"

"Tillsons, of course. Art was in the Pothole country two days ago, giving them orders."

"Then you found out that it was a man-made fire?" Cook asked gravely. "If it was, we'll have to ride."

"It wasn't," Breck asserted. "I'm sure it was from lightning. Art's business was more to keep them from giving us help."

He kept back the source of his information. That would involve too much explaining. Riding alone, after leaving Louise, he had thought of what she had told him. He began to see the heart of her with its deep compassion for all mountain people; taking their burdens upon herself, trying to solve troubles here without more bloodshed. To him that way was impossible. But he fragrance, yet now, here in the odor of pines he was not sure that he liked it. His name was written with a swift impulsive dash, while the flap bore only, Irene Sutherland.

He tore it open at once, and as he read, Irene came to him vividly. Tall and slender and undeniably beautiful. Black hair drawn to make three cornered her high forehead and accentuate her languorous dark eyes. It was a strange beauty, perplexing, all out of accepted standards.

The note began with gossip, ignoring the fact that they had agreed not to write. She filled a page and said nothing. But then, on the second, came to her real purpose. The senator was home now, grumping for a vacation. No place to go; nothing new. Driving the family frantic—like a big grizzly. "Do you have grizzlies? How splendid you must look in uniform! Like the rangers at Arrowhead."

Breck looked down at his blackened work clothes and grinned.

And then the truth. The High Sierras! How marvelous for the Senator's vacation. And with a ranger friend to show them about. "Gordon, you can't refuse! Be a dear!"

He stuffed the letter into his shirt pocket. Irene had turned to him again for amusement. She would do that where any other girl would have suffered the limits of ennui first. Somehow it seemed natural in her.

They've been in here long enough to have made up quite a batch."

"Maybe so," Breck agreed. "And when they do start out—"

"We close in. There's a new judge down on the valley. He'll back us with convictions if we send any man before him. I've only waited for Jud to make his first play and that certainly won't be long now."

Breck stirred his coffee and stared into the cup while old thoughts swept him at Cook's words. "We close in."

"What about the nesters?" he asked presently. "Do we include them in the clean-up?"

He was thinking of Louise and her anxiety for the families there.

"The Potholes are a different proposition," Cook said. "I don't look for any trouble from them if we take care of the Tillsons. Like this tool business. Art may have scared them off, but if you'd had tools you could have forced them to work. Lack of equipment was our fault, not theirs."

Breck shot a glance at the gray-haired man across from him. Bitterness had come into the ranger's voice when he talked of tools.

"Dad," Breck asked, "just why aren't there any in the Potholes box?"

"Now you done stirred something!" Sierra cut in. "You been to college; maybe you can figure it out. Go ahead, Dad, and tell him about the seventy-eight bucks."

Tibet Holds Hunting Is a Crime; Law Is Discreetly Evaded in One Province

Descendants of former criminals, the present Zayulis (of Zayul province, Tibet) seem to have inherited a cheerful disregard for the law. Hunting is one of the greatest crimes in Tibet; for Buddhist doctrine forbids the taking of life in any form. Inevitably a certain compromise has been made, and in most monasteries you will find that meat is eaten, but only the meat of domestic animals, which, it is thought, are clearly expiating some past sin in a former human existence by their present enslavement, writes John Hanbury-Tracy in Asia Magazine.

Wild animals are considered to belong to a higher form of life, and killing them is severely penalized in most parts of Tibet; I have seen a man given 300 lashes with rawhide whips for killing a hare. The result is that wild creatures are extraordinarily tame: it is delightful in some parts of southeastern Tibet to see hares, marmots, partridges, white pheasants, wild ducks and geese completely unmoved when one approaches to within a dozen feet of them.

But in Zayul the law is discreetly evaded, and the people are excellent hunters over difficult ground. In the forests are taken goral, serow, musk-deer, bear and wild pig. Traps, dogs and guns are all used. The guns are mostly long-barreled prong-guns of great age. The prong, which is made of the two horns of a deer, is hinged to the barrel of the gun close to the muzzle; normally it projects beyond the muzzle and looks like a pitchfork, but when the moment for action arrives it is turned down and stuck in the ground forming a rest for the gun. A slow match is applied, and, after some 15 minutes of waiting, the gun may or may not go off. Its use is clearly limited.

Plants Have Nerves

Plants have nerves. One in this class might be called a nervous wreck, judging from its actions when anyone so much as touches one of its leaves. The sensitive plant, or mimosa pudica, will immediately curl up its leaves at the slightest touch. After a leaf has curled up in apparent anguish it remains in a fallen position for about 15 minutes, then gradually uncurls and becomes its normal self again. This plant, originally from Brazil, grows wild in the Gulf states.

PAUL WINS RECOGNITION FOR GENTILE CHRISTIANS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 15:23-29; Galatians 2:1, 2, 9, 10.

GOLDEN TEXT—A man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ.—Galatians 2:16.

Persecution from outside was soon followed by what was even more serious—difficulty within the Church. If Satan cannot destroy God's work in one way, he cunningly tries another plan. Although the first council at Jerusalem (Acts 11) had decided that "to the Gentiles also hath God granted repentance unto life," the question did not stay settled, for there were persistent Judaizing teachers who now contended that even though the Gentiles could be saved, they had to come into the Church by way of Judaism and first fulfill the Jewish rite of circumcision.

I. A Serious Difference of Opinion—Grace Versus Law

The story of how this vital and fundamental question came up is found in the early verses of Acts 15. The entire future of the gospel ministry was in a sense dependent on the solution of this problem. Christianity is the only religious faith in the world that presents justification by grace as the way of redemption; all others follow (more or less) the path of salvation by works. The question now was: Shall works of the law be mingled with grace—can Jesus Christ alone save men, or is salvation through Jesus Christ plus something else? How was such a serious question to be settled? Should argument and strife be permitted to go on until the stronger party prevailed? Better judgment indicated the desirability of

II. A Christian Method of Settlement—Council not Controversy

There may be times when it becomes the duty of the Christian worker to take an uncompromising stand for the truth of God and refuse to be moved, come what may. But certainly there should be no such spirit in dealing with differing interpretations of Scripture on the part of sincere and earnest Christian brethren. How much would be gained in the Church today if, instead of magnifying differences and permitting personal desires and ambitions to intervene, men were willing to sit down in the spirit of Christ around the tables of Christian council and brotherhood, presided over and directed by the Holy Spirit (see Acts 15:28).

The whole question was honestly and carefully considered by the second council at Jerusalem, with the result that there was a vindication of the preachers of God's grace. After presenting a plain disavowal of those who had troubled them and subverted their souls (what a serious thing it is to teach error concerning God's Word!), the council being of one accord, gave recognition to Paul and Barnabas as men who had "hazarded their lives for the name of the Lord Jesus" and were worthy of confidence and support.

No man should think more highly of himself than he ought. Humility is a Christian grace which well befits a sinner saved by grace. But the Bible abounds with admonitions to honor one another, to recognize the laborer as being worthy of his hire, to give recognition to those who are over us in the Lord. The brethren at Jerusalem were thoughtful and courteous enough to so honor and encourage Paul and Barnabas. We could well follow their example in recognition of faithful servants of Christ in our own church or Community.

III. A Momentous Decision—Salvation by Grace

The final decision of the council is sent not only by Paul and Barnabas, but also by a committee from Jerusalem, a gracious gesture of fellowship. Courtesy is not out of place in dealing with even such difficult things as controversies on Christian doctrine—in fact it should be most in place in such a situation.

As a matter of record (a wise procedure in such a case), a letter was sent which, after addressing the Gentiles as "brethren," reviewed the history of the matter and then, without mentioning circumcision at all, puts upon the Gentiles "no greater burden than the necessary things." And what were these? Those things which relate to purity of life as those who were enjoying Christian liberty. The law of Moses need not be kept as a ground of salvation. They were saved by grace. But grace can never be the cloak of careless living, nor can liberty in Christ be interpreted as license to live in sin. We are set free in Christ, not that we may sin, but that we may "go and sin no more."

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 38 to 52), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of pep, dizzy spells, upset nerves and moody spells. Get more fresh air, 8 hrs. sleep and if you need a good general system tonic take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vivacity to enjoy life and assist calming jittery nerves and disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life. That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood. You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to get rid of excess poisonous body waste. They are antiseptic to the urinary tract and tend to relieve irritation and the pain it causes. Many grateful people recommend Doan's. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Ask your neighbor!

TINLEY IN PRACTICE TILT

The Tinley Park Baseball team will journey to Dolton Sunday afternoon April 23 for a practice tilt, with Dolton, last year's South Suburban Boy's Baseball Champions.

Both teams have not practiced more than once this spring due to weather conditions and will not be expected to be near their spring form. The game is being arranged because Dolton, now members of a new League, will start their schedule Sunday, April 20 and will be engaged in league competition thruout the season.

Both Tinley and Dolton, members of different Leagues, are keen rivals. Players are to report for extensive practice tomorrow at the Tinley Diamond at 1:30 p. m.

Sunday, the players are to meet at Coach Anderson's, promptly 1:15 and the Dolton game will start at 2:30. Any players interested are invited to be present. This game will not count in the season's standings.

TINLEY PTA NEWS

The April PTA meeting held Friday April 14 was based on 'Safety'. The second grade room presented, "Workers who protect us", which all enjoyed. A great step toward Safety was taken by our group when we voted to sponsor the immunization of all school and pre-school children, for diphtheria. This is the only way to check a future epidemic of diphtheria. With the number of cases in town this spring, why wait and probably have it spread over town next fall or spring, when we seem to have these epidemics.

Just as soon as all arrangements have been made, all parents will be given full particulars.

Mr. L. Lippencott, president of the "Not Over 50 Club", gave an interesting Safety talk. If you would be interested in joining this club, whose slogan means "Do not drive over 50 miles per hour", you may get a membership card and safety stickers, from Mrs. Eichelberg. There is no charge to join merely your cooperation in abiding by their safety rules.

Our other speaker was Officer Driscoll of the County Highway Police. He spoke regarding Safety in and around our community.

The State Convention is being held in the Stevens Hotel in Chicago April 18, 19 and 20. Mrs. Anfield Mrs. Eichelberg were elected to attend.

The most welcome Bank borrower today is the man whose keen sense of personal responsibility and respect for his pledged word, cause him to meet each loan obligation on or before the maturity date. His best credential when seeking further credit, is his record of previous loans paid in full and paid on time.

A conscientious borrower who may find a renewal unavoidable, will take pains to notify the Bank of his necessity well in advance of the due date. Formerly many careless borrowers made it a practice to renew their loans over and over again. Today, Banks are no longer permitted to extend loans indefinitely.

We have money to loan to good responsible borrowers. See us if in need of funds.

Since the Servel Electrolux refrigerator operates on gas, a single burner takes the place of moving, wearing parts . . . a tiny flame circulates the refrigerant, without wear or noise.

These are important advantages in themselves, but equally important are the other results that you get in refrigeration freezing without moving parts . . . the fact that the low operating cost is never increased, that Servel gives you more years of service, and actually can save enough in food alone to pay for itself.

Legislative

Highlights

The 61st session of the General Assembly is about half over. Many problems are confronting the members as usual at this time. Most troublesome is the matter of economy which taxpayers are demanding and politicians are advocating so that all may hear. I understand that department heads were called before the committee to investigate costs of government during the past week and all agreed it was a fine thing, but at the same time announced that they could not cut their appropriation one dime. These bills will of course come before the Appropriation committee and I am sure that reductions will be made in response to the demand of Republican members who have made their war cry this session. At the same time more demands are coming from the people for money for various projects which seem to have merit, and they should not go without consideration. My favorite idea of a place to start this economy drive is on the nineteen commissions now existing in the state. Some of them are worth what they cost—others are absolutely useless. Anyone interested may have a copy of House Bill 243 which shows the cost and names of these commissions. The total demand for them is over a million and a half dollars. Several should be discontinued.

The Drivers License law will not become operative until September first instead of May first due to the fact that the state cannot get ready by May. They tell me they have not enough help.

The writer votes against any and all junketing trips for members, whether it is to attend funerals or make some investigation. It is so very easy to spend other people's money. My stand which is considered arbitrary by some is that if members must travel they should use their own money. Otherwise stay at home. Careful investigation of the state setup will reveal that we have avenues through which the members can get information as to problems if they apply themselves.

Another problem is our school system and its financial needs. As everyone knows who has followed my work in Springfield, I believe the school system is the last place to start economizing. Every individual school board should watch its expenditures and the states should grant aid to the extent of its ability with enough supervision to see that the funds are properly used. The non-high districts must have more money in order to take care of their tuition pupils. The teachers' pension and retirement fund should be put in better shape this session and bills for that purpose are in the house and senate. Details of these bills cannot be given in limited space such as this. In answer to hundreds of letters regarding school legislation I desire to say that as chairman of the committee on Education I shall do all possible to advance all measures of benefit to our schools.

A bill to repeal the budget law as it applies to school boards is now on the house calendar. Opposition to its passage has arisen and it is thought that amendments to the present law may be passed to take away its objectionable features and still retain the budget law. Unless it is changed to take care of these features I intend to vote for repeal as I understand that it does not bring the results contemplated. I am one member that has confidence in local people to run their schools and refuse to believe that the average school board is careless with peoples money. There are instances where these things have occurred but a law is not the answer.

Bills to do something about the many pieces of delinquent tax properties are in the making. It is hard to handle it because of provisions in our state constitution, but every one knows that something ought to be done about mounting penalties and the subsequent loss to the community because of properties being out of circulation as income producing. More about this later.

Senate Bill No. 184, presented by Chicago, proposing to draw from the state gasoline tax for building a super-highway, is causing some consternation. Again downstate and Chicago draw the lines. Our counties outside of Cook feel that they cannot spare any of the money coming to them from this source. Roads throughout the state show need of more repairing and maintenance rather than less. Some people feel that we are about ready to catch up on some other things and let road building alone for a while. Perhaps in the northern part of the state we are better off than down state, but the importance of maintenance of what we have is of course well understood.

Among the problems facing a state is that of the health of its people. Along with hard times and undernourishment has come an increase in many diseases. Tuberculosis sanitariums are needed in many counties and provision for the people to tax themselves for such have been made. The increase of cancer in the state has been noticed by the legislature and last week two measures were adopted unanimously. One setting up cancer control board and another, presented by the writer, creating a diagnostic service in the Department of Public Health looking toward the prevention of death through an early diagnosis.

Relief for those in need is of course a state necessity. How to get enough money, how to see that only those who are entitled to it get it, and how to administer the funds are problems of this question. All are having attention just now and many proposals are presented. A plan will shortly be adopted which will as nearly as possible please the citizens of the state.

City Manager bills are waiting for call on the calendar. Many of us who support them are watching to see what will finally happen to them but much opposition exists as usual.

Civil service problems will also be met by an agreed bill with all interested parties sitting in on the parley. We hope to do away with the so-called Buck amendment and see that employees have a hearing before being dismissed. Also some other changes to improve the setup. This is one commission that I think is asking for more money than they are entitled to, judging by results of their activities.

Women may serve on juries hereafter if we get the bills passed now on the calendar with more friends than usual.

Most labor bills are appearing on the Democratic side of the House, most of them having come from Washington. If they pass they will have to be amended as everybody is tired of what labor unions are doing these days with some of the power given them by the New Deal. The bill giving unlimited power to the Labor Director in Springfield looks like a dangerous one to many people. The so-called Anti-spy bill has some very bad features as it comes from Washington. I understand the "Little Wagner" act has been presented by the Democratic member from this district at the request of Labor. The provisions are unknown to me at this time but I assume it is New Deal, which of course would give little consideration to the employer. Personally, my own thought is that instead of being laborites or big business members now we ought to study every bill and see whether we think it is right under existing conditions, regardless of its label. At least I intend to do that on all these kind of bills.

The problem of the use of liquor, narcotics and vice is having attention in Springfield. The investigation at the State University is being carried on with vigor and may result in the University being given police powers within certain prescribed areas surrounding the institution. Shall we have the tavern on the highway or shall we put them in all the municipalities is before the house again. Shall the owner of the tavern be liable for the acts of his patrons is another question.

Last but not least, I hope everyone who reads this will understand that I DID NOT PRESENT THE MARRIED WOMEN'S BILL. That was another O'Neill, a Democrat from Springfield. Those who do not know are sending me letters of a critical nature, to put it mildly. This bill provides that no woman may be gainfully employed who has a husband earning fifteen hundred dollars annually. I am opposed to it. This is not the proper way to apportion available employment and is an interference in private industry. If government wishes to do so by ruling, or industry by ruling, that is possible.

LOTTIE HOLMAN O'NEILL.

TRUTH about ADVERTISING

By CHARLES B. ROTH

FLY BY NIGHTS

WHENEVER Jeff Peters, the engaging hero in the book of O. Henry stories called "The Gentle Gaffer," went into a new town and spread his samples of corn cure, ink remover, etc., out in front of him, he always took one precaution. He made note of how soon the next train left.

He had to. Jeff never knew what minute he'd have to fold up his kit and hot-foot it for the station, with policemen and angry customers in close pursuit.

He was that kind of business man. We call them "fly by nights." They still infest our cities and towns, but you never saw one of them advertise or build a lasting success.

The man who advertises for your patronage shows that he has foresight and courage. He wants to establish goodwill and to remain in business, and the best way for him to do these things is to send down roots and advertise so that you may come to him whenever you need what he sells.

Jeff Peters stands for the furtive parasite, hanging around the fringe of respectable society, dashing in and taking whatever he can, giving nothing in return, ready to flee at any minute, always expecting to have to flee.

The manufacturer or merchant who advertises, however, serves notice that he has become a member of the community and society. He announces that he intends to be your business friend and to warrant your patronage.

And you buy from such a man with perfect assurance that you will always get your money's worth. And you do.

It's possible for you to go into some stores and find merchandise which glib salesmen assure you is "just as good."

The fact that even they use advertised items as the standard of comparison, is proof enough that they recognize the permanent power of the force we call advertising.

You as a consumer get more for your money if, in all your buying, you avoid the Jeff Peterses of business and select whatever you need from the stores of merchants who advertise and who sell advertised goods.

A business organization which wants to get the most for the money sets up standards by which to judge what is offered to it, and in Washington the government has an elaborate Bureau of Standards.

You can have your own Bureau of Standards, too. Just consult the advertising columns of your newspaper. They safeguard your purchasing-power, every day of every year.

The Influence of The Bible Upon English Literature

The following article written by Mrs. Charles Maddox of Orland Park on, "The Influence of the Bible Upon English Literature", and entered in the essay contest of the Third District of the Illinois Federation of Women's Club from Orland Park, won the first award in the district. It will now be sent to the state contest.

To find the influence of the Bible upon English literature, we must delve into the history of England and find out what writings were at hand in the earliest times. One of the first English books was "The Chronicle", a history beginning with the Roman Invasion about 55 B.C. With the Saxons following the Romans and they in turn being followed by the Danes, there was little time for things other than fighting. Education was considered secondary, and learning was confined to the cloister. Each monastery had writing rooms where monks carried on the copying of books. Under such circumstances, Caedmon wrote his "Paraphrase" about 680 and St. Bede wrote his comments on the Scriptures. King Alfred set about translating all existing books for the enlightenment of his people.

With the coming of the Normans the English slipped into virtual slavery, William the Conqueror demanding allegiance from all. Next to fighting, religion was uppermost and the Crusades were forming. After thirty years of travel in the East, John Mandeville wrote his observations, dedicating them to the king. (Incidentally this contained a belief that the world was round-this in the year 1350.) Then came William Langland and his "Piers the Plowman," and Chaucer and his "Canterbury Tales".

John Wycliffe was attacking the church which was gaining over the rule of the pope by means of help from the Houses of Parliament which body passed statutes forbidding money being taken from England for the Roman Church. These were known as the Praemunire and Provisos. Times were critical and war threatened on all sides, so in order to pay troops a poll tax was devised. This new tax caused a revolt led by one Wat Tyler, whose followers rose in rebellion and beheaded tax collectors and demanded that all laborers, who had been reduced to virtual slavery- be set free. Wycliffe organized the "Poor Priests" and took up the reforms of the mendicant friars demanding that the church and state observe "God's Law". The only Bible then being in Latin, Wycliffe translated it and the "Poor Priests" copied it by hand for lack of printing presses then unknown. Only the rich could buy the whole of the new Bible but parts were traded for produce or whatever a man could trade. Wycliffe's followers known as the Lollards went about explaining the passages to the common people.

The language was known as middle English, a cross between Saxon and Elizabethan English. Dramatic literature included only Miracle Plays designed to present morals and Biblical references in the flesh. This was the beginning of the famous "Passion Play". Schools were non-existent but scholars wandered about giving some instruction. Troubadours in northern France produced a series of poems or chants copied by other countries. In Germany there flourished the "Minnesingers" singers of events of the day. To this belongs the Niebelungenlied and others. The Norse ballads were then known as Heimskringla.

The Crusades promoted knowledge by encouraging those engaged in them to tell and write of their experiences. St. Bernard wrote of his trials and Abelard told of his experiences. Oxford and the Sorbonne were being formed and the Royal Library at Paris was founded.

About 1400 the Dutch and Germans were at work on printing presses and the Bible and other books were printed. Classical Italian literature commenced in Florence under the Troubadours and Dante wrote his "Divine Comedy", Petrarch his "Sonnets", Boccaccio his "Decameron". The Spanish conflicts with the Moors inspired "Le Cid". In Germany, Martin Luther was busy with his ninety-five theses against the Catholic church, thereby unfolding the Reformation.

By following the rise of religious changes and resultant wars based on the rights of people to freedom, education and choice of faith, from the Lollards on down to Luther, it can be seen that the distribution of an understandable Bible to all was the prime factor in the desire for education and the recording of events and deeds according to the natural ability to write and understand as a result of such education.

In no country where religion is suppressed, the great teachings of the Bible with-held, and the Ten Commandments (upon which all laws are based) ignored, can there be any enthusiasm for intellectual culture. There is instead only the purely barbaric impulse: to fight. To quote Wordsworth: "God's most dreaded instrument,

In working out a pure intent, Is man-arranged for mutual slaughter."

New Lenox Women Kill Nine Foxes

Last week, two New Lenox women proved themselves outstanding hunters when they killed nine foxes bare handed at their farm home Tuesday.

Mrs. Richard Walsh and her daughter Virginia, discovered a red female fox and eight young foxes within 50 rods of their home. Having no gun or adequate weapons, the two women killed the animals by hand.

No holds were barred, according to Miss Walsh and by means of hands and feet and strangle grips, the nine foxes were ultimately pronounced dead. Application for bounty has been made.

New Deal Democrats talk about possibility of Republican success in 1940 . . . Probably propaganda . . . Whatever is done about the cotton situation will probably be wrong . . . "Appeasement" program apparently profited only two big corporations.

WASHINGTON.—It's rather curious that for some weeks now one hears more talk about Republican victory in 1940 from Democrats, and particularly from New Deal Democrats, than from Republicans.

This is not just a strange situation. There is plenty of logic back of it. Some of it is founded on cold reason. But a good deal of it is propaganda.

The answer to why there is not too much talk of Republican victory from the G. O. P. leaders themselves is that they realize their own weakness. Despite the Republican victories last fall in many states, which had been held by the Democrats for six years, most of the states are still ruled by the Democratic party.

The importance of this lies in organization. It means that the Democrats have the state house crowd, men on the state payroll who want to stay there, and whose main job next year will be carrying their own states for the Democratic ticket regardless of who is the presidential nominee and what may happen to be written in the platform.

Most politicians believe that control of the county governments is more important than control of the state government when it comes to carrying a state in an election. And by the same token the Democrats are in control of a tremendous majority of the county governments in this country.

Most Democrats Don't Want A Conservative Candidate

Then, too, a careful survey of the 1938 election does not present the bright forecast for Republican success which some seem to think. If the Democrats in 1940 can only hold the states they carried beyond question in 1938, leaving out such doubtful problems as Indiana, Iowa and Colorado, they will have a comfortable margin in the electoral college.

Moreover, the Republicans don't like the idea of getting too enthusiastic until they know who their leader is apt to be. Thomas E. Dewey is way out in front now, but there is plenty of talk about Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio, and Governor John W. Bricker of Ohio, and others.

On the Democratic side there is an entirely different situation. Down in their hearts most of the Democrats, especially of the New Deal variety, believe the Democratic party will be successful again—but they would never think of conceding that the party can win with a conservative as the nominee!

For instance, most New Dealers would regard the nomination of a man like Senator Harry Flood Byrd of Virginia, or Josiah W. Bailey of North Carolina as little short of a catastrophe, and none of them would throw their hats up in the air over the idea of John Nance Garner being nominated.

So the strategy of these New Dealers at present is to keep the Democrats scared about the next election.

Whatever Is Done About Cotton Is Sure to Be Wrong

Only one thing seems sure about the cotton situation. That is that whatever is done will turn out to be wrong. In fact, economists who have studied the situation, who know about the rest of the world as well as about the United States, and whose judgment is not affected by political considerations, say frankly that not one of the proposed plans will work in the long run; that all of them would be expensive as well as futile.

With hindsight, the nonpolitical experts say they could have remedied the situation had they started on it in 1928. Now, they are not sure that anything could be done. But as a matter of fact, this hindsight would have been of no practical value, for the simple reason that even if one could have foreseen the future, back in 1928, it is inconceivable that a politically minded government would have taken the proper course. It would have seemed too brutal—too hard on the cotton farmers—at the time.

The year 1928 is picked not because it was the year before the business crash began, but because in a way it marks the starting of the great cotton producing countries of the world. It was the year before President Hoover began to worry about the farm problem. It was before the farm board of that administration. For there is no doubt whatever that it has been federal interference with the natural course of cotton growing that has raised the present problem.

Let's look at the history of cotton before that. Every now and then there would be a terrible overproduction, the price would go to pot, and the southern statesmen would scream their heads off about the census bureau issuing misleading figures, or the gamblers on the cotton exchange preying on the poor farmers, or something of the sort. Then, another season would see fairly good prices, and every one in the cotton states would be so happy that no one up north would even hear that the trouble was over. Every time the rest of the country heard about cotton it was the bad news, not the good.

Scheme Was Set Up Which Made the Trouble Permanent

With the Hoover farm board in action, however, a scheme was set up which inevitably made the trouble permanent instead of just every few years. For a century before that the British cotton mill owners had been hoping to develop some other section of the world as a cotton producer. They wanted something which would prove a check on high cotton prices in the short-crop years.

Every one interested in cotton could see that, with the starting of this idea of the government doing something for the cotton farmers, the period of occasional low prices for cotton had gone forever—that is the possibility of the United States dumping a cotton surplus at very low prices had passed. This was made even more clear when the United States government started paying farmers not to grow cotton.

With this "guarantee" of high world prices, development of cotton growing in other areas grew by leaps and bounds. Uncle Sam was holding an umbrella over them. Danger of cheap cotton from the United States in any particular year was averted.

As a result of this, Brazil expanded her cotton growing. She found that she could sell cotton at six cents a pound and make money. There has never been a chance since that she would abandon this expansion, for there is not a state east of the Mississippi where cotton can be produced, at a profit, at any such price.

Appeasement Program Helped Only Two Big Corporations

Curiously enough, apparently the only two big corporations in the country which profited from the "appeasement" program—during this short span of life—were the big electric utility holding companies which President Roosevelt is known to dislike so cordially. One of these is Electric Bond and Share. The other is Commonwealth and Southern.

It will be recalled that one of the most convincing steps in the so-called appeasement program was the agreement on the part of TVA to buy out the interests in Chattanooga of the Commonwealth and Southern, and in Memphis of the Electric Bond and Share (this latter held through a subsidiary).

At the time these agreements were made, Harry L. Hopkins had been talking to senators and members of the house as to the necessity of doing something to encourage business.

One of the main reasons for "appeasement" the electric industry was that Hopkins had been thoroughly sold by the arguments for the preceding 18 months by William O. Douglas, now on the Supreme court, that if something could be done to encourage the electric industry, there would be such a flood of spending that it would be almost enough alone and unaided to produce the return of prosperity.

But a far more important part of the appeasement program, and one which affected all business and new investment instead of merely the electric business, was tax revision.

President Intervenes in Fight for Revision of Taxes

Suddenly the President intervened in the fight for tax revision with an ultimatum which seems to have definitely ended all chance for it. This does not apply, of course, to the postponement of the increase in the social security taxes, but to the levies on corporations.

His ultimatum was that if any reduction should be made in the estimated revenues, this must be made up by adding additional taxes somewhere else—but on the corporations. In short, his verdict is that congress may shuffle the present taxes on business in any way it may deem to be helpful, but that the net result—in estimated revenues—must be the same.

What so many of his lieutenants had hoped, and this goes not only for important members of the house and senate but for the treasury department and the department of commerce, was that the government would take a chance—that it would encourage business by reducing taxes on business, hoping that business would thereupon boom, and the actual revenues of the treasury would be increased by the reduction rather than cut.

This phase of the problem the President ignored completely. He still insists that if estimated revenues are reduced, then government spending, for relief or something else, must be reduced to precisely the same amount. He attacks the problem just as though the federal budget were now balanced, and any reduction of the corporation taxes would throw it out of balance.

This has divided business as to the tax revision, will keep it divided unless congress forces the gamble on the President, which does not now seem likely.

Washington Patterns Future After Original L'Enfant Plan

Spring Brings Influx Of Tourists to Capital

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

The spring tourist trek is descending on Washington. The Capital City has changed so rapidly in the last decade through a $200,000,000 government building program that even those who live there have difficulty keeping track of the shifting scenes.

The problem faced by the commission of fine arts and the builders of the new Washington is twofold. In carrying out the plan of 1901, worked out to incorporate virtually all that was feasible in Major L'Enfant's original plan, they are striving to produce the most beautiful capital in the world and at the same time to provide suitable quarters for the ever-increasing bureaus of the federal government.

To erect a truly graceful building large enough to house the thousands of employees of one of the major departments, such as commerce, interior, or agriculture, is a task so difficult as to challenge the most skilled architects. There must be hundreds of offices, all with outside windows; no gloomy medieval castles will prove satisfactory. Hugeness is a physical necessity, grace an artistic obligation.

Federal Triangle Large.

To their everlasting credit, the architects who have designed the new edifices have mastered seemingly impossible difficulties. The federal triangle, where are concentrated more official activities than in any other capital, covers an area of about 20 city blocks from its Fifteenth street base, the enormous department of commerce building, to its Sixth street tip, the Apex building, which is to be occupied by the federal trade commission.

Within the nine buildings of this group are offices for more than 25,000 government employees; yet, despite the vastness of the structures, the development has genuine architectural attractiveness and dignity.

Fortunately L'Enfant planned a Federal City with room to expand. Even the largest edifices can be made to look graceful if surrounded by grounds sufficiently spacious, and the new buildings are so framed by pleasant parks and plazas that they escape the charge of crowded awkwardness.

With its new south extensible section, the department of agriculture building has become the largest government office structure in the world, housing in its 4,292 office quarters 6,450 employees; yet even in such a commodious building only about a third of the department's Washington personnel can be brought together.

Wings Added.

Constant expansion of activities requires an increase in government office forces too rapid to be taken care of in any single structure, even though it be extensible by merely adding wings and be placed, as is this, in a 35-acre park.

One of the latest of the new structures to be occupied is the new interior department building, into which some 3,000 workers recently moved. Designed by Waddy B. Wood, in consultation with Secretary Harold L. Ickes, this building departs somewhat from the classical style of its neighbors. No pillars adorn it, but setbacks providing outside walls for its many wings give the appearance, at a distance, of Doric columns.

Building Has Electric Stairway.

This gray stone giant, just north of the marble edifices that form the frame for the Lincoln memorial, is the first government office building to be equipped with electric stairways. Two of these have been installed to carry passengers between the C street and E street levels and to relieve congestion during the rush hour when lunch is being served in the big cafeteria in the basement. Besides the moving stairs there are 20 high-speed elevators and 11 complete stairways. Like others recently constructed, the building has a completely automatic air-conditioning system. The structure is virtually a city within a city. It has a telephone system now handling 2,200 main lines and 1,100 extensions. At a peak, 2,600 main lines can be served. The system is equivalent to one serving a city of 30,000.

Along the north side of broad Constitution avenue, across from the munitions building, stand the white marble edifices described by the commission of fine arts as the frame for the Lincoln memorial. Erection of a home for the federal reserve board between Twentieth and Twenty-first streets completes this composition, and when eventually the temporary buildings, result of war-time haste, are removed, one of the major dreams of L'Enfant will be realized.

Pan American Annex Planned. Other splendid buildings in this "frame" are those occupied by the National Academy of Sciences, the public health service, and the Pharmaceutical association. Plans for an annex to the Pan American union have been prepared.

Although a short sight-seeing tour seldom includes a trip through the public health service, that bureau is one that will richly repay a special visit. Within its laboratories men are constantly at work, seeking out causes of diseases that menace life.

Here Dr. Edward Francis discovered the nature and origin of tularemia, or "rabbit fever." Here he is now conducting a study of intermittent fevers. He has exposed himself to the bacteria of so many diseases that it seems a miracle that he still lives. Other earnest scientists are his colleagues. They work tirelessly, risking their own lives for the safety of others.

The late Andrew Mellon, former secretary of the treasury, in presenting to the nation his collection of art, together with a $10,000,000 building to house it, made a gift valued by experts at probably $50,000,000. For a site, the location across Constitution avenue from the Apex building has been chosen. Mr. Mellon's magnificent gift is not to bear his name, for he has asked that it be called the National Gallery of Art.

Any discussion of Washington art treasures must include at least mention of the Corcoran gallery, the Phillips Memorial gallery, the Freer gallery and the National Collection of Fine Arts, formerly the National gallery. All are distinctive. In the Phillips gallery the pictures are hung as they would be in a home.

Washington circles, parks, and plazas are adorned with many memorials, some of outstanding artistic merit. For those interested in sculpture and other arts, the city offers a field for months of study.

What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Gives Practical Advice on Feeding 'Teen Age Child; Describes Some Special Food Needs of Both Boys and Girls

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

BEGINNING around the twelfth year in girls and the thirteenth year in boys, the rate of growth is greatly accelerated. Then children require large quantities of food to meet the needs of their rapidly maturing bodies and they usually develop huge appetites. Unfortunately, however, they are often inclined to overlook the foods that are most necessary to health, to eat at odd hours, and to stuff themselves with rich combinations that may severely tax the digestive system.

Mothers may find it exceedingly difficult to deal with their offspring all through the 'teens, when physiological changes are taking place which mark the transition from childhood to maturity. For along with the development of his fast growing body, the child's emotional life undergoes a profound and disturbing change. The boy or girl who was formerly amenable to direction suddenly exhibits a desire for independence. He becomes jumpy and irritable, and the wish to direct his own life extends even to his choice of food.

Mothers must mobilize all the patience and forbearance at their command—must make it their solemn duty to see that their adolescent children have the foods they require for growth, for stamina, and for building resistance to disease. For the stress and strain of adolescence will be far more easily weathered by boys and girls who are properly nourished.

Quality Important as Quantity During the years of greatest growth, boys and girls frequently require more food than their fathers or mothers. But it is essential that the diet be well balanced and of the highest nutritive value. It should include an abundance of easily digested energy foods, such as breadstuffs, potatoes, cereals and macaroni products, as well as liberal quantities of the more concentrated fuel foods, such as butter or margarine. There must be an ample supply of high quality protein—which is furnished by meat, fish, eggs, cheese and milk—to build the new muscle tissue required to cover the lengthening frames of the boys and help build the rounded contours of the girls.

Need for Minerals and Vitamins There must be ample amounts of the various minerals—especially calcium and phosphorus for the teeth and bones, and to help build sound, healthy nerves; iodine for proper functioning of the thyroid gland; iron for building increased quantities of rich red blood. Every vitamin must be included in the adolescent's diet to promote normal health and development, but vitamin A is especially valuable at this time of rapid growth, and vitamin B is also required in liberal amounts to meet the extra demands of increased activity and growth.

Girls Warned Against Reducing Girls, on the other hand, may become fussy and try to cut down radically on the fuel foods, with the foolish idea of keeping fashionably thin. This must not be permitted, because it may result in under-nutrition, which opens the way to fatigue and nervousness, and may lead to serious disease.

In addition to wholesome, nourishing food, 'teen age boys and girls should have plenty of rest, sunshine and healthful outdoor exercise. And they also deserve the sympathy and deep understanding of their parents.

Toothache? Try Sitting on a Stove —Or Solicit Your Neighbor's Opinion

Ancients (and Moderns, Too) Offer Deluge of Panaceas Ranging from Garlic to Zulu Cherries; Even Shakespeare Philosophized About It!

The next time you have a toothache here's what not to do:
"Place a snip of garlic ground with oil and salt on the thumb-nail on the ailing side and apply the concoction to the gums surrounding the aching tooth. Be very careful, however, to surround the garlic with dough to protect the flesh from leprosy."
If that doesn't work—and it won't—here's another prescription that's just as useless:

"Gather a number of earthworms and place them in a dish filled with moist sand. Strew over it the minced yolk of one egg. The earthworms shall eat it. After some time they are cleaned, put in a pot, which should be covered well, placed in a hot oven and dried."

"About two egg shells full of this powder are rubbed to form a salve with bloodstone and red sandal, two ounces each, unadulterated musk, two scruples, lard obtained from a he-bear, lard from a boar, five ounces each."

"Smearing" Is Helpful.

"If you wish to use the 'remedy,' you should first scratch the tooth

In Bavaria toothache sufferers were sometimes advised to chase a cat over a plowed field until the animal perspired. After catching it, the aching molar was to be rubbed with perspiration taken from the cat.

with a splinter of aspen wood and then smear the salve on it."

If the tooth still aches—and it will—don't bother to try this:

"An eel, a spiny back,
True indeed, indeed,
True in sooth, in sooth,
You must eat the head
Of said spiny back,
To ease the aching tooth."

This whole business may sound silly, and of course it is, but up until a hundred years ago in most parts of the world, and even in some remote corners today, toothache remedies such as these noted above were and are prescribed conscientiously for the relief of dental pain.

Looking into the history of aching molars and remedies, there is no evidence available that Adam ever had a toothache, nor is there any case history on the dental health of Eve, but it is a safe assumption that there have been sore teeth ever since the time of our common ancestors and it is almost as certain that there have been as many remedies as there have been toothaches.

"Dentists" in Abundance.

One time, history relates, a fellow was asked to name the most widespread profession. With little hesitation he replied there are more dentists in the world than representatives of any other field. When called upon to prove his statement, he tied a handkerchief around his jaw and sat himself in front of a church on a great holiday, moaning and groaning with feigned pain.

CHINESE CURE—Garlic and saltpetre should be applied in the left ear to ease an ache in the right side of the jaw, and vice versa. So runs an ancient Chinese toothache cure.

Almost everyone who entered the church stopped to prescribe for his distress—practically everybody who entered the church was a "dentist." He proved that everyone is a "dentist" and what's more he showed that there are as many recipes for toothache relief as there are dental advisers.

Since time immemorial there has been, indeed, a legion of medicines, a host of magics and a startling multiplicity of procedures intended to cure the evil of toothache. All three kingdoms of nature—plants, animals and inorganic substances, have been called upon to stop dental pain.

But before we learn more about the weird remedies of magic, superstition and ignorance, it is fitting, perhaps, to find out just what a toothache is and how to cure it. Any member of the American Dental Association will tell you that toothache is not a disease in itself—rather it is a symptom of disease, the most common of all human ailments, tooth decay.

Only One Way to Stop Pain.

Decay results because there is a break in the hardest substance in the human body, tooth enamel. When decay exposes the nerve of the tooth, pain results. Medicaments will give temporary relief, but modern thought is that the best way to stop a tooth from aching is to relieve its nerve from exposure.

Of course ancient people knew little of the whys and wherefores of toothache and even today many people know little of the pathology of the teeth, with the result that many of the ancient recipes based on superstition are still being prescribed today. The ancients did know, however, that toothache is a painful thing.

There is a story told of a Turk in Bosnia, who upon encountering a weeping child, asked, "Why are you crying?" When the child replied, "A snake bit me," the Turk said, "That's nothing. I thought you had a toothache."

The English of old had a proverb which pointed out that "He Who Hath Aching Teeth, Hath Ill Tenants." The proverb embodies more truth than the author realized, for modern dental and medical study has shown that aching and diseased teeth can upset other tenants in the human structure, such as the heart, eyes, tonsils, joints, etc.

Shakespeare Was Right.

Shakespeare immortalized aching molars in "Much Ado About Nothing," when he said:

"For there was never yet philosopher
That could endure the toothache patiently."

The majority of toothache remedies since time unrecorded have been applied to the aching member of the dental arch, but relief of pain has been sought by the application of toothache cures to cheeks, nostrils, ears and even to more distant parts of the body such as the upper arms, elbows, forearms and wrists.

Folk dentistry in all parts of the world uses almost every type of plant life for relief, from acorns to Zulu cherries. The Polish Jews eat an apple which has been roasted with a species of palm leaf over a fire for tooth comfort. East Indians inhale an infusion of bamboo.

The ancient Greek dentists, believe it or not, prescribed buttercups. Garlic has been the remedy of many people, while others have used lemon, lily-of-the-valley, wheat, moss, parsnip, tobacco and a host of other types of vegetation.

One Austrian remedy urges the patient to cook garlic in vinegar and to tie a poultice of same on the wrist on the side of the aching tooth. In Bavaria they peel a piece of garlic and place it in the ear. The Chinese make pills of garlic, horseradish seeds, saltpetre and human milk, which they inserted in the nose.

In Brandenburg a dental genius "discovered" tooth ailments could be relieved if the sufferer ran around a church three times without thinking of a fox. The Ruthenians placed their hopes in a concoction of dog tooth powder. Once people were convinced that oral pain would disappear if the teeth were picked with the nail from the middle toe of an owl.

Mice and Lion's Teeth.

Another Central European physician of the Middle Ages advised his patients to bite the head off a mouse and then suspended said head from the neck. It was believed, too, that a youth would be free from aching teeth for the remainder of his life if he wore the canine tooth of a lion around his neck.

Just as "surely" as plants and animals were infallible cures for toothache, so were treatments with MOST FANTASTIC—According to an anonymous humorist, all one has to do is take a mouthful of cold water and sit on a hot stove until the water boils. The toothache's then supposed to be gone.

human organs and secretions considered sure-fire relief, for example:

"To ease the tooth, you well might,
Visit the graveyard at midnight.
Make sure you dodge the morning sun—
Then bite the bone of a skeleton."

In Prussia it was believed that the index finger of the right hand had greater healing power than the other fingers, so the Prussians, among other remedies, urged that the index finger of a corpse be placed against the aching tooth, with the plea:

"To thee, the deceased,
I complain of my pain.
Take my toothache from me
And keep it in thy grave."

The inorganic substances used for toothache cures run from agate to zinc, with demand for arsenic, iron rust, lead, salt and water. Water, perhaps, is involved in the most fantastic of tooth remedies. All one has to do, according to the advice of an anonymous humorist, is to fill the mouth with cold water and sit on a hot stove until the water boils.

And that advice is just as good for the relief of toothache as any mentioned above.

Modern science, "which has released the mind from the oppressing grasp of mystical bugaboos, which has liberated our surroundings from the presence of spirits and ghosts, of demons and devils" has demonstrated that toothache is merely the symptom of a disease, namely: dental decay.

The moral of our story is that when a tooth aches the nerve is either exposed or in danger of being exposed. Permanent relief is assured only by relieving the nerve from exposure or losing the tooth.

Douglas Brings New Color to Supreme Court

Freckle-Faced Justice Is The Youngest Since
Joseph Story

Twenty years ago a sandy-haired young Scotchman pushed a lawn mower and stoked a furnace at Whitman college, Washington. Today the same sandy-haired Scotchman, a little older but still a "kid," is the youngest United States Supreme court justice since Joseph Story of Massachusetts was elevated to the bench at the age of 32, in 1811.

William Douglas, at 40, looks back on a meteoric rise from the day he "mothered" a box-car-full of sheep from Washington to Chicago on his way east from Yakima, en route to enter Harvard law school. With a short-lived teaching career behind him, Douglas changed his mind about Harvard and studied law at Columbia under Harlan F. Stone, who is now his colleague on the court.

After teaching at Columbia, Douglas met Robert Hutchins who was then the "boy dean" of Harvard's law school. Offered a post of assistant professorship at Harvard, he was soon made Sterling professor of law at Yale. In 1936, when he accepted a post on the securities and exchange commission, Douglas was said to be the country's highest paid law professor.

Mrs. Douglas, the girl he kissed good-bye back in Yakima, became his wife the next year. They have two children, Mildred, nine, and William, seven.

Douglas is regarded as the most extraordinary character placed on the Supreme bench in many years. He is a New Dealer and a close friend of Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, a former Yale faculty member whose specialty is opposing monopolistic practices. Although accused of being a "left-winger," the new justice denies radicalism and simply insists government must be "mobile, bold and intelligent."

PATTERN DEPARTMENT

THE neckline is a very important detail in making your dress becoming. Thus No. 1719, designed for large figures, has a plain, deep v-neckline which is especially slenderizing. Darts at the waistline tend to make you look inches slimmer. This is a particularly comfortable dress to work in, with its deep armholes, slashed sleeves, and easy waist. It's easy to put on and to iron, too, thanks to the button-front. A diagram design, it may be all finished in a few hours. Calico, gingham, percale or seersucker are nice for this.

For slender, youthful figures, the heart-shaped, frill-trimmed neckline of No. 1726 is perfectly charming and as flattering as can be! The pointed basque bodice diminishes your waistline to practically nothing, and the wide-shouldered sleeves and flaring skirt accent the slender youth of the silhouette. Make this pretty dress of silk crepe, taffeta or prints, and see if it doesn't win you many compliments!

The Patterns.

No. 1719 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 4½ yards of 35-inch material; 4½ yards of braid.

No. 1726 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 takes 4½

Boring From Within

He who aspires to be captain of his soul must expect mutinies. Variety makes us spend as much money as necessity.

You can't keep a good man down, but he may have to go to some other place to come up.

There's always a bright side. By the time the horn stops working, people can hear your car a block away, anyhow.

First Great Advantage

If a child admires and respects you, you don't have to exert it very much to influence its behavior.

People who never make excuses seem to get along as well as those who do.

Perhaps we are happiest in planning to soon "take life easy" than we would be if we did.

Life Is a Mission

Every other definition of life is false, and leads all who accept it astray. Religion, science, philosophy, though still at variance upon many points, all agree in this, that every existence is an aim.—Mazini.

SAFETY TALKS

Defective Cars in Accidents

COMPILATION by the National Safety council of state motor vehicle accident reports shows that 9 per cent of the motor vehicles in fatal accidents were reported as defective.

In non-fatal accidents defective vehicles numbered 4 per cent.

The council commented that "it seems certain that mass statistics understate the true importance of this problem. A careful study made several years ago indicated that vehicular defects were at least a contributing cause in 15 per cent of the accidents."

CURE FOR UNEMPLOYMENT

"THE only way to restore prosperity in the United States is to cure as far as possible the evil of unemployment. This can only be done by speeding up private agriculture, commerce and industry to employ more people. Existing industry must be encouraged to expand. Individuals must be encouraged to spend their own time and their own money in developing new enterprises and new products."—U. S. Senator Robert A. Taft.

TIPS to Gardeners

Care in Transplanting

TRANSPLANTING is an important activity in almost every garden, but a gardener will save time and possible disappointment if he knows what should and what should not be transplanted.

The following should not be moved: Celosia, didiscus (blue lace flower), four o'clock, hunnemannia, and perennial sweet pea. Because of their peculiar root growth, these flowers are damaged, sometimes even killed, when transplanted.

Flowers which may be transplanted with little fear of damage, as long as the moving is done properly, include ageratum, alyssum, snapdragon, aster, calendula, marigold, pansy, petunia, pinks, salvia, scabiosa, verbena, Canterbury bells, columbine, hollyhock, pyrethrum and viola.

There is a third division of flowers, according to Harry A. Joy, flower expert of the Ferry Seed Breeding Station, whose lives will not be endangered by transplanting, but whose growth will be stunted. Both plant and blossoms will be smaller but earlier. Larkspur, zinnia, phlox, nasturtium and bachelor button are in this group.
